

ASEAN Conference on Drug Use Prevention
International Standards
December 5-7, 2016

This Conference is anchored on the international global standards which summarize the currently available scientific evidence, describing interventions and policies that have been found to result in positive prevention outcomes and their characteristics. Concurrently, the global International Standards identify the major components and features of an effective national drug prevention system. It hopes to guide policymakers worldwide to develop programs, policies and systems that are truly effective investment in the future of children, young people, families and communities. It builds on and recognizes the work of many organizations (e.g. EMCDDA, CCSA, CICAD, Mentor, NIDA, WHO) which have previously developed standards and guidelines on various aspects of drug prevention.

The primary objective of drug prevention is to help people, particularly, but not exclusively young people, to avoid or, delay initiation into the use of drugs, or if they have started already, to avoid developing disorders (e.g. dependence). The general aim of drug prevention, however, is much broader than this: it is the healthy and safe development of children and youth to realize their talents and potential and become contributing members of their community and society.

In a nutshell, drug prevention is an integral part of a larger effort to ensure children and young people are less vulnerable and more resilient to drug use.
